Farley Center Beekeeping Program Tour

Our first bees were installed in 2016 in three locations at the Farley Center by Patrick Norby and Dan Hedctke. The goals were to provide pollination for the crops grown at the Farley Center, educate Farley Center visitors on honeybees, and provide a habitat for honeybees to thrive. The Farley Center's Beekeeper Incubator Pilot Program was launched in 2017 and continues to grow. The program was designed to promote small-scale, sustainable beekeeping by providing an environment and guidance to learn beekeeping. The Farley Center thanks Volunteer Beekeeper Patrick Norby for designing and implementing this program and Matt Kersten, who joined him in 2019.

Urban Triage Farm Tour

Since 2022, Urban Triage has housed part of its Supporting Healthy Black Agriculture (SHBA) program at the Farley Center. SHBA is a 12-week leadership workgroup series designed to empower and inspire breakthroughs and transformation in Black communities through growing their own food as well as entrepreneurial benefits and opportunities in the agriculture field. Join UT Agriculture Program Manager Ruthanna Hutton-Okpalaeke for a tour of the fields and information about their program.
